Emerging Technologies Librarian

The Hesburgh Libraries at the University of Notre Dame seeks an energetic, creative, collaborative, forward-thinking, and service-oriented Emerging Technologies Librarian to be a member of our Academic Outreach & Engagement program. The successful candidate will be innovative, results-oriented, strategically focused and highly knowledgeable in the area of emerging technologies. S/he will possess excellent communications, interpersonal, and team skills. Working both independently and collegially, s/he will help lead the Libraries in creating superb specialized services for today’s students and faculty as well as those of tomorrow.

RESPONSIBILITIES:
The individual in this position will be responsible for assisting users with the identification, evaluation, and use of emerging technologies in the creation of a variety of media-rich projects. S/he will explore, develop, promote, and assess innovative online tools and related services for library learners and identify learning and engagement opportunities to support student research and promote student success. A significant task will be to maintain and expand a website (https://remix.nd.edu/) that promotes and supports student creation of media-rich projects. S/he will help students individually and in the classroom setting to identify and use a variety of digital media in their assignments, and s/he will work collaboratively with teaching faculty, especially those in the Multimedia Writing & Rhetoric program, to identify ways to incorporate media-rich assignments into student coursework. This person will help to identify, monitor, assess, and relay information about new and emerging technologies of interest to the Library, including recommendations for adoption. S/he will work collaboratively with a dynamic group of library colleagues to provide point of need reference services, course-integrated library instruction, library workshops, and a variety of outreach activities. S/he will also work with librarians to create and implement online learning modules to support both information and digital literacy.

QUALIFICATIONS:
An MLS from an ALA-accredited graduate school or an equivalent terminal degree. Candidates must have experience with web applications and demonstrate the ability to identify, evaluate, and use emerging technologies effectively to enhance library instruction and other outreach services. Enthusiasm for working with students and faculty, excellent oral and written communication skills, the ability to work well with colleagues, and demonstrable instructional skills are also required. The ideal candidate will have some knowledge of copyright law as it applies to digital media, as well as knowledge of instructional methods and training techniques, including curriculum design principles, learning theory, and group and individual teaching techniques. Experience teaching library skills in an academic setting, and experience working with diverse cultures and learning styles are preferred. Candidates must demonstrate a clear understanding of academic libraries and their connection to campus stakeholders. Candidates with experience in programming and web design relevant to the construction of online learning objects and experience or coursework in instructional design are preferred.
