Paul Foley (‘37) graduated magna cum laude from Notre Dame’s College of Arts and Letters. He then moved to Chicago to pursue a career in journalism, spending his first year working as a reporter, followed by a year on the editorial staff of the Detroit Free Press and Michigan’s Pontiac Press. At that time, he changed paths and began what would become a lifelong career in advertising. In 1976, he was awarded an honorary doctor of laws degree from Notre Dame. Paul is survived by three children: Susan Mary, Peter Michael, and Jane Celeste.

A member of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, the Detroit Historical Society, and the Natural History Society, Paul had a notable interest in history. Thus, it is appropriate that the library collection in his name is in the area of American history.

The Paul Foley Memorial Library Collection has added significant depth to Notre Dame’s American history holdings, principally through its use in the acquisition of expensive reference works and large multi-volume sets. Steven O’Brien’s biographical dictionary, American Political Leaders: From Colonial Times to the Present, illustrates the former category; the 24-volume Germans to America: Lists of Passengers Arriving at U.S. Ports, edited by Ira A. Glazier, American Immigration and Ethnicity (20 volumes), and The Heritage of American Catholicism (12 volumes) show the importance of the latter in building resources in immigration history, a major field of study at Notre Dame.
