Craig R. Hoyt ('72) and Sue Anne Pieroni created the Hoyt Endowment in honor of their parents. Their father, a 1948 graduate of The Ohio State University, was chairman of the board of Buckeye Boxes, Inc., in Columbus, Ohio, a company he founded in 1966. Craig is currently president and chief executive officer of Buckeye Boxes. He and his wife, Lori, have four children and live in Dublin, Ohio. At Notre Dame, they are members of the Edward Frederick Sorin Society Founder’s Circle and the Stephen Theodore Badin Guild.

With the continuing growth and development of the programs in the University’s Mendoza College of Business, its faculty and students are becoming active researchers in fields that increasingly span not only business but also many other disciplines in the social sciences.

By supporting research on business issues, the Hoyt Endowment is an active participant in this expansion. It makes possible the acquisition of research reports and statistical data files that allow Notre Dame students and faculty to examine behavior, decision-making, cultural issues, and public policy issues as they relate to business — on both a national and international level. Supporting the work of the research centers in the Mendoza College of Business, it makes a significant, ongoing contribution by helping to provide a strong library collection upon which students and faculty from a number of disciplines can draw.
